These profiles are excerpts from the Jim Allison: Breakthrough companion book, This is What a Hero Looks Like. This companion photography book expands on the film's portrait of Nobel Prize-winning scientist Jim Allison and celebrates cancer scientists from all over the world at different stages in their career – all united by their passion to defeat one of the world's deadliest diseases.

As you scroll over each scientist, you will see background information. Choose THREE scientists to learn more about. Click on each scientist's picture and read the expanded biographies. Once you have finished, complete the reflection questions below.

The three scientists I choose are:

Dr. Allison once said, "science picks you; you don't pick science." What are some of the reasons the scientists you chose were drawn towards a career in science?

Based on the profiles you have read, what are some characteristics you feel make a good scientist?

Of the three scientists you reviewed, which person do you identify with the most? Is there something in this person's experience that you identify with and why?
